"I am proud to have led the WBA through such a transitional time. The WBA has a rich history, a wealth of tradition and a distinguished legacy, which I hope will continue well after this bar year. To do this, we must leverage the tremendous talent and significant resources of our members, as well as those available to us here in the nation's capital," said Norwood. "This will position us to continue building capacity, creating member value, and pursuing mission-focused programming to preserve the WBA's history and embrace its legacy. In my view, the WBA's legendary past should serve as the guide for charting its illustrious future."

The WBA is the oldest and largest predominantly Black bar association in the District of Columbia. It was founded in 1925, simultaneously with the National Bar Association (NBA), of which it is a local affiliate. Since its founding, the WBA has been dedicated to the pursuit of making America's promise of equal justice under law a reality for all, in the District of Columbia and beyond. The WBA's mission is grounded in the philosophy of Houstonian jurisprudence, which recognizes the law as a tool to achieve justice through social engineering. The WBA accomplishes its mission through advocacy, continuing legal education and professional development for its members, public service and community outreach, as well as several pipeline programs, including multiple scholarships awarded annually to local law students through the WBA Educational Foundation.

In addition to her leadership role at the WBA, Norwood serves on the NBA Ethics and Professional Responsibility Committee, and is the founder and immediate past Chair of the NBA's Government Procurement Law Section. She has previously served as Regional Director for Region XII of the NBA, overseeing one of the largest and most active of the 12 NBA regions.
